

Illustrative Notes from Jenny Odell's Ecopoesis Lecture

By Ann Liu

ECOPOESIS is about re-thinking and re-imagining how people see and feel their own ecologies and their roles in times of climate change.

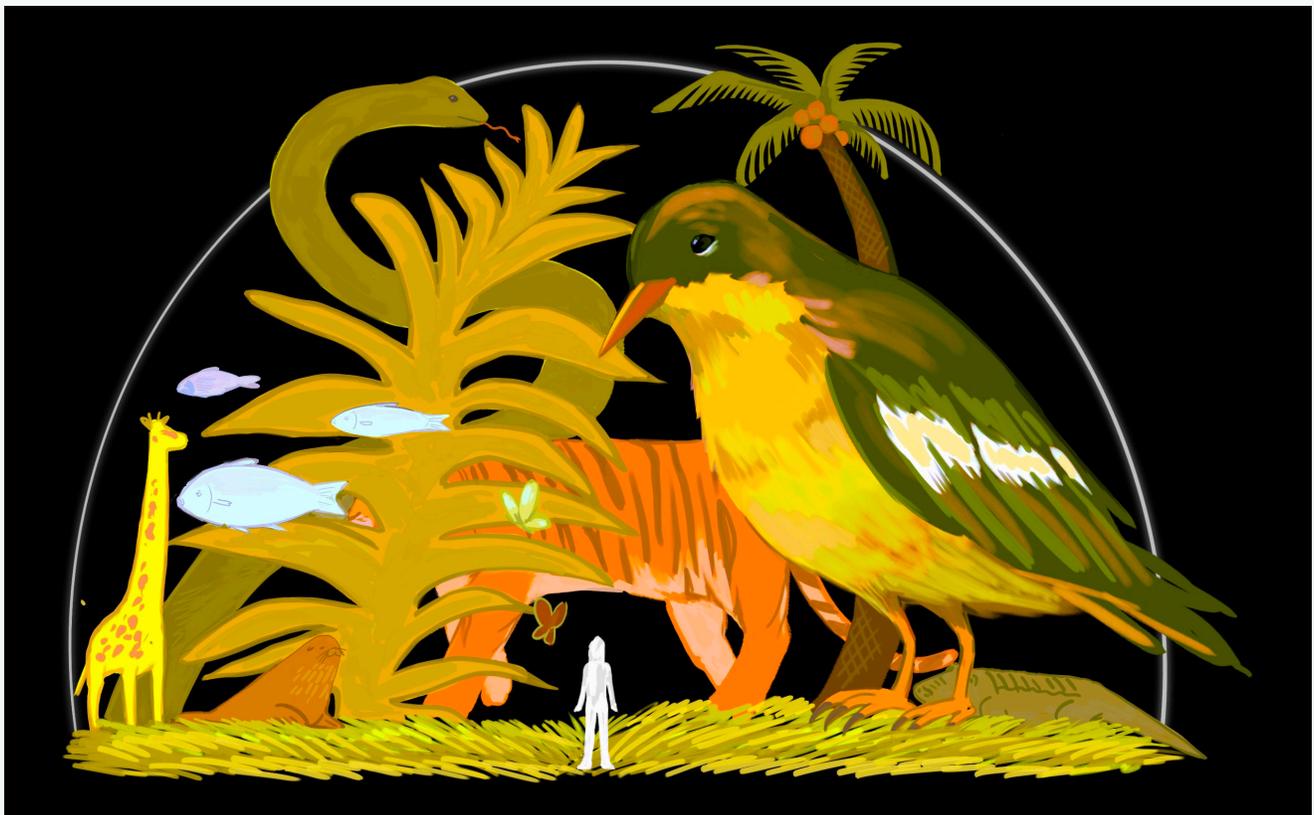

ECOPOESIS gathers humans together for a meal or coffee to establish shared, collective contexts and understandings, about local wisdoms, about questions, about anxieties – around ecological awareness and climate change.

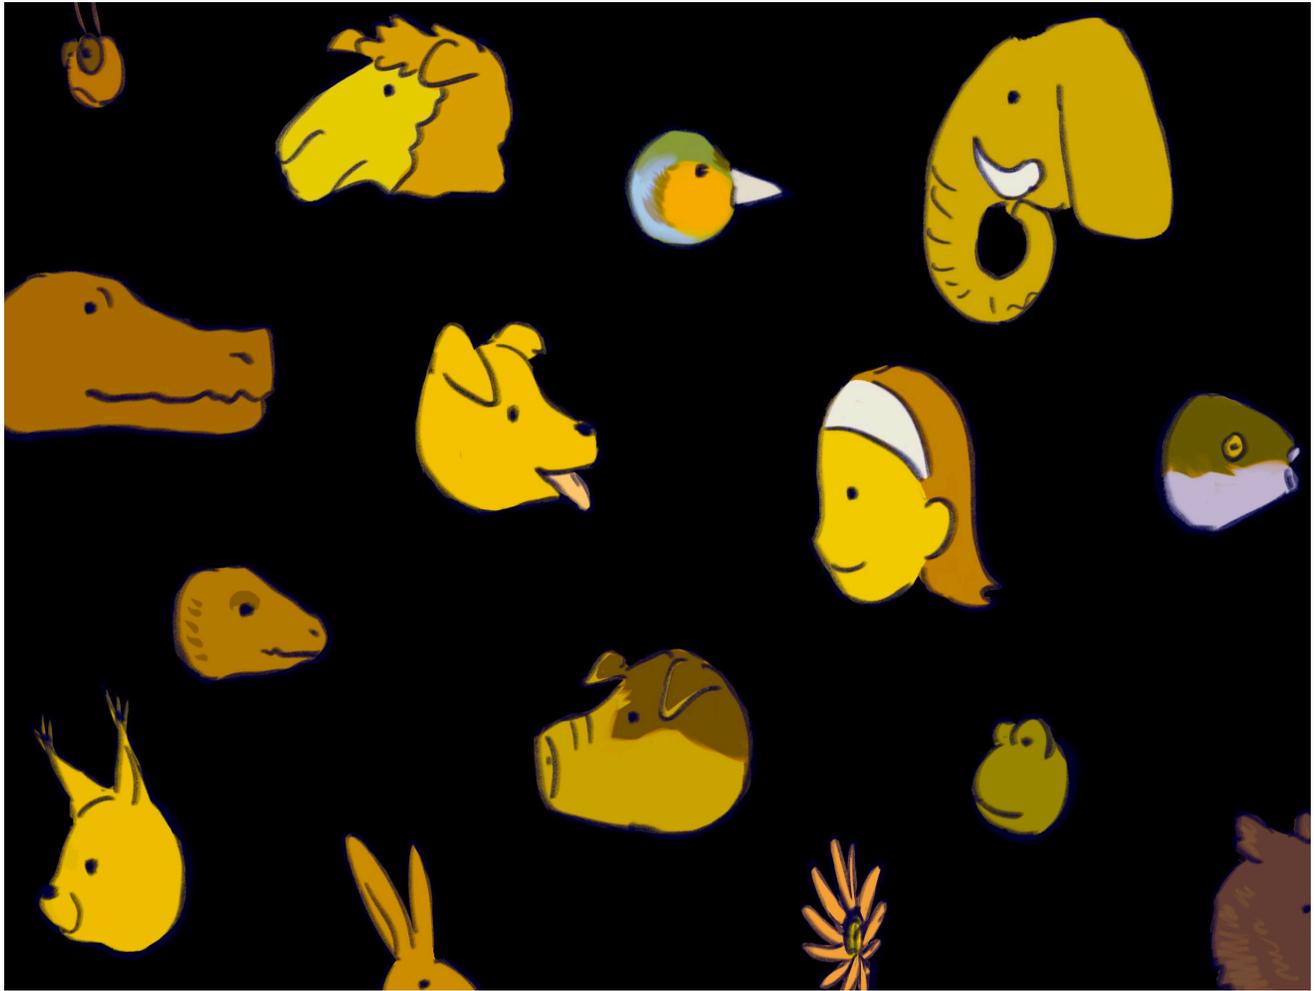

ECOPOESIS is about models – about how we use words and forms to make mental and physical models of our worlds.

ECOPOESIS is about sharing our models – through sharing our process – through discussion and dialogue, through language and form making.

We believe in the power of gathering – to create a collective context and vocabulary, to see paths forward for humans and more-than-humans alike.

– Ecopoesis manifest from the Architectural Ecologies Lab

Ann Liu is a Senior student in the BFA Illustration program at California College of the Arts. Passionate about editorial art, Ann is constantly experimenting with new ways of expression.